Much like other specialized settings, conference interpreting can be a completely different animal, requiring different skills and strategies. With a constant rise in the frequency of Deaf professionals' participation in conferences of all varieties, as well as the number of interpreting conferences in our field, it is important that interpreters be prepared to meet the variety of different needs that can emerge in these settings. This session will aim to provide strategies, tips, and tools for both interpreters who would like to be and those who are currently engaged in conference interpreting.
